A CONTROVERSY as to what is the longest word has been raging of late.
Among several claimants, "antidisestablishmentarianism"—twenty-eight letters—appears to be the longest legitimate English word.
As to the longest word in any language of the longest word in any language of the longest word in any language.

As to the longest word in any language, a writer in The Living Church thinks the following word bears the palm, namely. "Lianfairpwillgwing-igogerchwyrndrobylltysillogogocch." "It is the name of a village in North Wales," says the writer, "and while lunching at a Welsh inn at Betts-y-coad recently I heard the name pronunced with perfect ease and clear-pounced with perfect ease and clear-

Coad recently I heard the name pro-nounced with perfect ease and clear-ness by a young Welshman."
But, according to another clerical correspondent of the same journal, this word simply "ian't in it" with the Greek word for "hash" of one hundred and seventy-two letters, to be found in Liddell and Scott's Una-bridged Lexicon—

After this it is expected that the con-troversy will languish; and this Greek name may have prompted MARK Twain's refusal to eat hash abroad besuse he did not know what it was ade of, or to eat it at home because e did know what it was made of.

POPULAR SUPERSTITION.

Was Followed at Louisville a the Drowned Body of a Boy Was Found.

Louisville, Ky, Aug. 19—According to an old superstition prevailing among the lower class it is said that when a person is drowned one should procure a piece of bread and cast it in the water, and the bread will come to a standstill wherever the body lies. This was tried by Abraham Siegel, a friend of the family of the drowned boy, Henry Smith. He bought a loaf of black bread, cut a small hole in it, and placed a candle in the hole and is mall board, and with a showe sent it out in the river.

After floating around in the river or a while the craft came to a sudden stop, and Siegel exclaimed that body of young Smith was resting underneath. George Pord, a boy 17 years old, and a well-known diver around town, was ready to make the due, and strange to say after one leap into the depth, which was marked by the strange crast, he brought the body to the surface.
